Large American Industrial Solutions Manufacturer

Southco Japan Moves into Osaka and Starts Operations!

Southco Japan, Ltd., the Japanese subsidiary of the large American industrial solutions manufacturer Southco, Inc., opened new offices in Osaka City (Konohana-ku) and began full-fledged operations in Japan.

Founded in 1899, the parent company has long driven industry as a world leader in access hardware such as locks, latches, fasteners, hinges and handles. They have operations in more than 30 countries around the globe and supply products to some 70,000 companies that make ships, cars, construction machinery, industrial equipment, enclosures, medical devices, computer and more.

With new offices in Osaka, Southco can focus on improving their customer services in Japan, which will include building a new logistics and quality management system and further development of customized products.

To help Southco get settled, the Osaka City Government and IBPC Osaka provided information on candidate locations and office space, introduced specialists in company registration, taxes and staffing, and lent them a business support office for use free of charge for up to six months.
